P06 | RISING TO THE CHALLENGES OF URBAN CONSTRUCTION

The UK domestic political agenda has seen housebuilding at its centre for some time - especially with the recent publication of the Government's Housing White Paper. With the pressures to deliver housing at scale, light gauge steel is 'futureproof' and poised to meet construction industry demands.

P24 | BUILDING FOR A BETTER FUTURE

The Homes and Communities Agency (HCA) is tasked with helping create successful communities by making more homes and business premises available for those who need them. Sir Edward Lister, Chairman of the HCA outlines why offsite could play a major role in improving delivery.

P28 | ACCELERATING OFFSITE

LHC is leading the way in connecting local authorities, housing associations and registered social landlords to the world of offsite construction from its process of manufacture to systems and products. We spoke to Director John Skivington about exciting times ahead for the organisation.

P68 | Inspirational Precast for Nottingham One

Nottingham One is notable for being one of the largest mixed-use developments delivered in the East Midlands. Concrete was selected at an early stage as the principal material for the development and offsite manufacture added a range of project benefits [...]

P72 | LSF Delivers Student Style

Icarus LSF worked with Carillion Construction to create a large student accommodation scheme of over 280 units, located in central Newcastle. This time-critical project with several complex site constraints needed a building solution that would deliver both pace and innovation [...]

P88 | Offsite: only part of the solution

While offsite manufacturing is destined to play an increasingly important role in the future of building engineering services, it doesn't have all the answers yet says Tim Rook, Technical Director of the Building Engineering Services Association (BESA) [...]
